

Christos Softas is a PhD researcher in the University of Birmingham (UoB) that focuses on the synthesis of biocompatible ceramic powders for additive manufacturing, utilising Selective Laser Sintering (SLS). His background is in Physics and Materials Science. Before joining UoB, he was working as a research scientist at the Centre for Research and Technology Hellas (CERTH) in Greece, focusing on various projects in the areas of solar fuels, emission control and filtering applications.